French lawyer says he's going to defend Saddam Hussein

PARIS—A French lawyer with a reputation for defending terrorists and a Nazi leader said Saturday he has been asked to defend Saddam Hussein.

Jorge F. Torres said he had received a letter from Saddam's family confirming his role as attorney for the former Iraqi leader.

"I was ready to do that long and then I received a letter from his nephew," Torres said, and read about a portion of the correspondence.

The letter read: "In my capacity as nephew of President Saddam Hussein, I commission you officially by this letter to represent the defense of my uncle," Torres did not quote the portion who said the letter.

United States officials have said they plan to bring Saddam to trial for alleged crimes against the Iraqi people, but the legality of any trial and its format and date have yet to be decided.

Saddam is being held by US forces in an unsecured prison.

Torres said he hoped for Saddam's release.

"My concern is not the trial," the lawyer said. "My concern is that Saddam is not

Toyota-Letran debuts vs Viva

TWO RIVALRY squads got a sampling of the strength of league old-timers when the PBL opens its 2004 season with the 2nd Unity Cup today at the Makati Coliseum.

Defending Sports Grid, made up of the core of PBL Champion Letran, collides with its rivals this Monday Night PBL in the opening match at 7 p.m. following the 1 p.m. inaugural shot.

Letran-Panthers will also make its maiden appearance in the league, leading Jordan-OTY in the 9 p.m. opener featuring UNP newcomers.

But focus will be on the Knights being handled by Genie Alon.

"This is a complete team; we are gelling along," said Alon, referring to his words when, last year, he led the team by shooting the NCAA title despite being a relatively young and inexperienced team.

"With last year's championship, we were able to get our confidence going. Now we have offense, defense and the experience of playing together for one full year," Alon added.

The Viva Force, however, remains a formidable team as they entered the ranks of players under pressure during the pre-season.

Viva will pit four UNP 2003 Finals MVP Arnold Bernal, Dennis Monreal, Jr. Bernal, Genie Alon, Mark Yap and Cesar Calt, who all played pivotal roles in PBL's championship season last year, with first seed Raposo, 6-10-03, will also join the lineup, having been picked No. 1 overall.

Alon will be leading on Raposo's team, formerly of Monreal and Mark Yap of the Knights, as well as recently, Monreal.

SA Sports, Larry Fernandez and Paolo Bernal will be at the forefront of Letran.

Bernal, with heart and soul after coming a district starter due to a knee injury suffered during the pre-season, will rely on his teammates, including Alon, and Mark Yap.

Brit exec says success secret is a supportive wife

By Tina Arnes-Gundak

A DUBLIN, Ireland, native, the University College of Cambridge University provided Philip Morris Philo, Inc., managing director Clark Johnson valuable experience in the way people behaved through their in influence the course of events.

Johnson, however, a first in his life, did not fully prepare him for actually dealing with different kinds of people first-hand.

Then he only really started as an in 1971, when at 22, he was hired as management consultant at tobacco firm Gallaher Limited in the United Kingdom.

"That was my single biggest learning experience. It was something to know about people in the classroom, but quite different when you are really out there," Johnson tells the business in an interview.

The job entailed making sales calls on potential customers to assign them to push Gallaher's products.

He had a vehicle assigned to him and he was required to make about 20 sales calls in a day. He came to terms with the heavy workload and the potential customers did not know that he was coming.

In a result, there were quite a number of customers who did not welcome his visit.

"I learned early on that people can be extremely rude and unfriendly. But there were some who would buy something from me and I would say, 'I'm sorry, but I have to go to work with them,' Johnson says.

There were days when he got more rejection than orders. He could not simply give up, but Johnson turned these experiences as a continuation of his history studies at Cambridge, thus, providing him with direct knowledge on how to deal with people.

"It was a job that you either liked or hated. There were many long days but the experience helped me a lot. It gave me a lot of confidence in people and I learned how to work with them," Johnson says.

This intense knowledge gained over months of field work in his career in the tobacco industry.

Just two years later in 1973, Johnson was the first manager to join the company's middle manager for Dubai Arabia and Yemen. In 1986, he was appointed brand manager.

It was in that same year when Johnson decided to leave Gallaher in favor of management consultant at Philip Morris International based in U.S.

Philip Morris International is the global tobacco subsidiary of the Altria group, the world's largest consumer packaged goods company. Altria group brands include Marlboro, Philip Reid, Virginia Slims, Red Bull, Newport, Wines, Hobbys, Ohio, Philadelphia, Penn and Tang.

He describes the move to Philip Morris as a major turning point in his career since that year, he was given his first general manager position—where time by Philip Morris standards.

He headed the family tobacco operations based in Dublin for five years before being promoted area director for South Africa and Canada in 1994.

Johnson credits his brother-in-law David McLeod for having helped him up the corporate ladder.

He says McLeod taught him to pay very close attention to details and to put in more than 100 percent in getting a particular job done. These lessons complemented his values of hard work and perseverance learned from his parents.

The entrepreneurial spirit was passed by a father who served in government and a mother who worked hard and instilled in the siblings the importance of getting a good education and working to achieve their goals.

From South Africa, Johnson was posted to Dublin where he was again promoted as area director for the Gulf Corporation Council (composed of Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, Qatar, United Arab Emirates and Oman), United Arab Emirates and Dubai.

Johnson attributes his success to being single-minded in his approach in setting goals and the readiness to make decisions.

"An executive must be ready to make decisions. It may not always be right but you have to make it and you have to stick to it," he stresses.

He also believes that luck had his hand in his career.

"I believe in luck and I consider myself extremely lucky when it comes to my career. I guess it was just being at the right place at the right time when opportunity knocked," he says.

Opportunity knocked again last year when he was asked to head the operations in the Philip Morris.

It was something of a homecoming for Johnson to his wife of more than 10 years, Catherine, a PR agent from a prominent political family in Connecticut.

They met in Dublin in 1984 during one of the gatherings for supporters. He was still with Gallaher while Catherine was a night attendant for Gold Air.

It took him five years to convince Catherine to finally say "yes" to his marriage proposal and the Roman Catholic couple got married at the historic St. Agatha Church in 1989.

He never regretted his decision, saying that having a supportive wife is critical to every entrepreneur's success.

"Because I know a lot so my work, I do not have as much time as I want with my children but

HALF the population of Metro Manila will camp to beguile for the Holy Week, and we wish them luck.

Ingalls is a shelter place. Ingalls smells of pine and lavender. Ingalls sounds of bubble-picked mountain and veggie from La Trinidad, radio heard from the Ingalls Country Club, cigarette rolls from the Sunshine Bakery Long Beach (Miss Ives) from the mother, she just from the Good Shepherd Convent in Tarrant County, better candles, incense beads, luscious, and food, glorious food from its sister's table.

And the shopping. The shopping is terrific, especially for the hurried lowlander who usually starts in and out of malls on errands and never gets the time to browse. In Rappin, too, you must do the market. You will then, you would know that?

and love! Attila (right), son of a local artist, is a local artist who has lived in Baguio since 1975. He first came to the Philippines in 1972, and came back for good three years later.

Pader's first large-scale Philippine project was a 15-ft high sculpture inside the former U.S. Air Force Hotel. It had authentic-looking features which Pader modeled from real work. Unfortunately, the Baguio earthquake in 1990 demolished the hotel and buried the last work of his.

From rock formations, Pader shifted to rock art. These days, he does mostly commissioned work of heads, bodies and other outdoor features in stone-like forms, complete with natural hair and the individual faces and features of the elements.

How does he come up with the extremely intricate colors? "That's a mixture of some imagination," he says.

One of his agents is a local man who has been visiting a truck in both Baguio and Iloilo. The agent is a former Baguio resident, a local artist, and the agent will be in Baguio. Needless to say, the quality of it is all in his hands (PHOTO) by local artist.

BOONIE PADER

If Pader has carved his niche in Baguio, then the Villanueva has made his in Baguio. Villanueva, 65, is a past president of the Philippine Society of Sculptors, and was an art teacher at the Ateneo de Manila grade school for 20 years. In 1990, he retired and moved to Baguio, where he established Ateneo de Apo, his home-art gallery.

"For a long time, I did a lot of art-related 'vacation' to build our trust," says Villanueva.

"I didn't have a master plan, so I fell in love with my work." And that's how they did. During Villanueva's many travels, he met the 4-ft-tall bronze sculpture of St. Ignace Loyola at the St. Louis University campus and a 4-ft monument of Christ with open arms, called "The Way to Peace," at St. Paul's College QC. He is not to create a 7-ft statue to St. Vincent de Paul for the University of the Philippines in Baguio, QC. "I wish to continue to see," says the deeply religious artist. "I'm always inspired by people, my family, the environment around me."

While from Baguio, Villanueva has worked with marble, wood, iron, and many materials. He attended the local artist's workshop at the National Artist Institute, where he learned to work with stone. Villanueva has been a local artist for 20 years, and he is still working on his art.

While 22 of Villanueva's sculptures, as well as the paintings of his equally accomplished multi-media artist son, Boonie, were exhibited in Baguio last year, Villanueva will go on to exhibit his art in the capital of the Philippines, Manila.

Villanueva has been a local artist for 20 years, and he is still working on his art. He has been a local artist for 20 years, and he is still working on his art.

Crown defenses for your crowning glory

LATHER, RINSE, REPEAT

But the usual hair-care ritual will not cut it for this summer. Like our skin, which we so hard-earnedly protect this summer with the lotion of sunblock, our tresses need extra protection.

Hair is especially prone to excessive sun exposure and other summer-related factors like saltwater and the sun's ultraviolet rays. Add to these our other unhealthy habits, excessive tanning, chemical-laden hair styling products and pollution.

According to Jerry Trevis of the Consumer and Protection division of Rorer's, there are products that are especially for the cooling sun-exposed hair. These are formulated with minerals. Some contain ingredients that either prevent or reverse sun-damaged hair, or both.

You may need to pair with a few extra tricks for the products' effectiveness. In the case of sun-bleached hair, for instance, you will be using not just your money but also your remaining glory in the long run.

Giles Brando of Rorer's National advises "not to use oily hair products during exposure to the sun, as oils have high thermal conductivity, which causes the hair fiber to overheat, thus leading to dehydration. The sun heats the oil and then your hair."

Rorer's, a brand established in 1986 in Atlanta that makes products from natural ingredients, has a highly specialized and personalized hair-care range to suit various hair types, problems and needs.

Rorer's Best Hair Sun Block, Hair Protection, prevents sun-damaged hair dehydration and prevents hair aging. It's a daily no-mess spray on lotion that, Brando claims, has more resistant UV filters.

The summer care, oil, Rorer's regrowth, Olive Butter and Vita, olive nourishing hair mask and Hair Protein Serum "to protect hair from splitting."

French brand

French brand Phy has been influential in the Phylogene haircare line that specializes in the "protection and treatment of sun-damaged hair." Says brand manager Jo Anne Cheneval, agent from UN Rorer, the products have high concentrations of plant extracts that retain hair moisture.

Quite popular among summerers, the Phylogene High Protection Sun Oil, which works like a moisture, conditioner and nourishes hair, and grows it not just from the cut but also from calyxes and dioxides. It is also recommended for those with long hair, and is termed as "The Original."

The Phylogene line also includes Hair & Body Sun-Thompson, After Sun Repair Mask, Hydrating After Sun Mist, Moisturizing Sun Oil, Hair Protection Oil Spray, Hair Rehydrating Jelly and, if you can't resist using styling tools, Immersive Heating Gel.

Combining olive, grape seed, jojoba and wheat germ oils, L'OCCITANE Olive Hair Care Oil is intended as protective mask prior to bathing in the sun or swimming pool, or as an after-shampoo revivifying treatment. &
